Discover a time over 400 million years ago, when a fish learned that its fins could be used to push off of the ocean floor. Then jump ahead and meet one of the first animals to step out of the sea and take a breath of fresh air.		Coelacanth            (SEE-la-can-th)            410 MYA	Ichthyostega            (ick-thee-oh-STAY-gah)            365 MYA
EVMS002	Dimetrodon/Cynognathus	Available Now	Suggested Retail Price $20
Dimetrodon was the king of his time, 280 million years ago, well before dinosaurs roamed the earth. Then the Permian-Triassic extinction occurred wiping out most of Dimetrodon's descendants. Those who survived, had to adapt to a world where they were now the under-dogs, and thus began mammal evolution.		Dimetrodon            (die-MET-row-don)            280 MYA	Cynognathus            (sy-nog-NAY-thus)            245 MYA
EVMS003	Yinlong/Styracosaurus	Available Now	Suggested Retail Price $20
The North American plains are famous for their rich fossil finds of great horned dinosaurs such as Styracosaurus and Triceratops. The origins of these dominant herbivores was unknown until recent discoveries in northern China of early ceratopsian ancestors, like Yinlong.		Yinlong            (yin-long)            160 MYA	Styracosaurus            (sty-RACK-oh-saw-rus)            75 MYA
EVMS003	Yinlong/Styracosaurus	Available Now	Suggested Retail Price $20
After the extinction that ended the age of the dinosaurs, mammals began to rebuild the earth's diversity. These early mammals quickly adapted and dominated many ecological niches. Some mammals even ventured into the seas, where they eventually evolved into today's whales and dolphins.		Pakicetus            (pack-ah-SEE-tus)            55 MYA	Squalodon            (SKWAH-low-don)            33 MYA
